Work in Progress and Under Review for Publication

“Bureaucratic Capacity in Brazilian States”

(This project has begun with an online survey of public servants and political appointees in 6 Brazilian states. The survey will expand to new states and be repeated in some of the previous states within 12-18 months. The survey will then be followed by case studies in various states focused on particular policy areas.

“Politics and Social Communication in Latin America,”

(This project was a context-sensitive, multi-wave panel survey undertaken at the level of neighborhoods in two Brazilian cities. We identified our main respondents’ political discussants and interviewed these discussants. The project also included an analysis of the content of media communications as well as local networks of political activists. The sites for the project were Juiz de Fora and Caxias do Sul. The National Science Foundation and the University of Pittsburgh supported this research. Currently under review are two articles from the project (one comparing Juiz de Fora and Caxias do Sul, the other on the dynamics of partisan identification when party “brands” change). We are preparing a book manuscript tentatively called “Social Networks and Voting Behavior in Latin America.”

“Political Party Assistance in Morocco.”

This study is part of a multi-year grant from USAID to study political party assistance programs in developing countries.

“Decentralization in Mozambique.”

This study is part of a 10-country study of decentralization undertaken by USAID in 10 Sub-Saharan African countries.
